It's the difference between marking a box and finding a way to achieve a more mature level of leadership. The tension between these two totally different needs is all too common in business. And what is worse, it's the tension that is fuelling the current wave of cynicism towards our leaders and our leaders' perceived lack of competence. What we often forget is that one needs to juggle many balls at once. With only one goal and no objectives, everything becomes one-dimensional and limiting. It's like playing a game of chess with the game board tilted towards the opponent. And this is where so many managers fail. Especially in small business. Often the great visionaries of the past are forgotten in b7e8fdf5c8
